Quincy Byrdsong, EdD is a veteran healthcare and education leader. He is a nationally recognized speaker in the areas of dynamic education programs and curricula for research administration, responsible conduct of research, and human subjects protections. Dr. Byrdsong earned his Doctor of Education degree from Tennessee State University and currently serves as the Vice President of research operations at Ballad Health. He is a Past President of the Society of Clinical Research Associates (SOCRA) and serves on the Board of Directors for both the Association for the Accreditation of Human Research Protection Programs (AAHRPP) and Public Responsibility in Medicine and Research (PRIM&R).
Morning session in HSLC Room 1335
Confessing Our Past, Challenging Our Present, Contemplating Our Future: The Journey for Excellence in Research Equity

Advances in healthcare have been primarily driven by the inquiry and discovery mindsets of human subjects research and those individuals gifted with the abilities to design timely and relevant research studies. While these advances have been substantial, the pursuit of knowledge has often come at the expenses of communities who were voiceless or compromised by societal systems. In this presentation, the speaker will take the audience on a journey of this important work from its early beginnings to present day considerations to a look into what can be and should be for our future. The objectives of the talk are to:

- Chronicle the history and approaches to human subjects research
- Identify contributing factors to the recruitment and selection of research subjects
- Discuss the salient considerations for the future of research and its place in enhancing the public good

Afternoon session at South Madison Partnership, 2238 S. Park Street
Incorporating the Voice and Influence of the Community in Research

Many of the historical accounts of human subjects research demonstrated considerable community involvement in not only the geography of the research but the individuals who participated. The needs of the community provided the important questions which researchers were able to explore and ultimately offer solutions. However, the community voice and subsequently its influence has not been fully understood or realized. In this talk, the speaker will engage the community in a rich discussion on the role the community plays in research and improving health and well-being. The objectives of the talk are to:

- Identify historical lessons learned from community involvement in research and examine how these lessons impact our understanding of research today
- Discuss trends in healthcare and research that pose social and cultural consequences and explore strategies to mitigate these consequences
